Under what circumstances does the car seat switch need to be replaced?

The car seat switch may need to be replaced in the following situations:

If the switch fails to function properly and cannot adjust the position of the seat as intended, such as not being able to move the seat forward or backward, or not being able to adjust the reclining angle.

When the switch becomes loose or damaged, it may cause unstable operation or even pose a safety hazard.

Excessive wear and tear on the switch, resulting in poor contact or intermittent operation, is also an indication for replacement.

If the switch is exposed to water or other liquids and gets damaged, it should be replaced to ensure normal functionality.

In cases where the switch is malfunctioning due to electrical faults or short circuits, replacement is necessary.
