What is the working principle of the air massage lumbar support in a car seat?

The air massage lumbar support in a car seat operates based on a combination of pneumatic and control systems. It typically consists of inflatable air chambers or bladders located in the lumbar area of the seat.

These air chambers are connected to a pump and a control unit. The control unit regulates the inflation and deflation of the air chambers. When activated, the pump inflates the chambers, creating pressure and providing support to the lumbar region of the person sitting. The inflation and deflation sequence is controlled to create a massaging effect.

The timing and intensity of the inflation and deflation can be adjusted, allowing the user to customize the level of support and massage according to their preferences. This dynamic movement of the air within the chambers helps relieve muscle tension and provides a soothing and relaxing experience for the occupant's lower back.
